ABSTRACT

Based on data collected by the American Association of Junior Colleges (AAJC), this directory provides information on 667 junior colleges in the United States and its territories, Canada, and other selected countries for 1957-58. Following introductory material on the scope of the directory, tables provide statewide summaries of the following data for all junior colleges, and for public and private junior colleges: number of colleges, AAJC membership, student enrollments and status, and numbers of full- and part-time faculty. Next, the directory lists the colleges alphabetically by state, providing the following information for each: location; administrative head; AAJC membership; state recognition or accrediting agency; type of control or affiliation; co-educational or single-sex status; date founded; enrollments for 1957-58 broken down by freshman, sophomore, or unclassified status, adult enrollments, and full- or part-time status; and full- and part-time faculty members. The following sections provide a list of individual AAJC members; an alphabetical listing of junior colleges; a directory of national and regional junior college organizations; and a directory of junior college honorary societies and social organizations. Finally, an analysis of junior college growth reviews changes in the number of colleges and enrollments from 1900 to 1957, the size and location of colleges, faculty numbers, types of colleges and forms of control, and AAJC membership. Junior College Directory, 1959

Compiled and Edited by AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF JUNIOR COLLEGES
EDMUND J. GLEAZER, JR., Executive Director

The Directory contains information about junior colleges in the United States, its territories, Canada and a few other nations. The list comprises both accredited and non-accredited institutions. In general, institutions have not been included when they have not been designated as junior colleges by state departments of education. Every reasonable effort has been made to secure accurate information about each college. In this undertaking heavy reliance has been placed on the accuracy of the reporting junior college.

Separately organized junior colleges on campuses of senior colleges, general colleges, or lower-divisions of four-year colleges and universities have been included only if they are active members of the American Association of Junior Colleges. Undergraduate centers and extension centers, as in Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, are included in the listings in view of the fact that they are essentially two-year colleges.

More extensive and detailed information about junior colleges may be secured in American Junior Colleges, Fourth Edition, edited by Jesse P. Bogue, and published by the American Council on Education, 1785 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W., Washington 6, D. C., 1956.

Definition of Terms

Administrative Head. Each institution's designation of its administrative head has been accepted. The official title has been indicated following the name. It is assumed that this person is the one to whom correspondence should be addressed. It is not implied that in all cases the designated administrative head holds final administrative responsibility for the college.

Accreditation. The Amerian Association of Junior Colleges does not act as an accrediting agency. Member institutions are prohibited by constitutional provisions from indicating, implying, or publicizing accreditation by this Association. Types of accreditation or equivalent recognition or approval are indicated by symbols as follows:

State Department of Education; the Board of Education in the District of Columbia; the Junior College Accrediting Commission in Mississippi; the Provincial Department of Education in Canada.

D—indicates accreditation by the above

D^1—Indicates approval to operate as a junior college

Year Organized. Each institution was asked to report the year it was organized as a junior college. In some cases the date of origin of an institution which later developed into a junior college may have been given.

Enrollment. Enrollment data are given for the year June 1, 1957, to May 31, 1958, unless otherwise stated. A "special student" is defined as a student who is not classified as either a freshman or sophomore because he is carrying less than a full-time load but who can be considered to be working toward a degree, diploma, or certificate. An "adult student" is defined as one who is above the compulsory school age and who would not be classified as a freshman, sophomore, or special student.

The reader should note that this method of reporting gives a gross head count of students enrolled for a twelve months' period including the summer session of 1957 and the two semesters of the college year 1957–58. Presumably there are no duplications. This is not a count of the number of students in junior colleges at any one time during the year. Rather it is an indication of the total number of different students served by the junior colleges.

Faculty. The number of faculty is given for the same year as the student enrollment. The full-time faculty equivalent total is the sum of the full-time faculty and the full-time equivalent of the part-time faculty.

Membership. Membership in the American Association of Junior Colleges is indicated by an "M" or a "P" depending upon whether the membership is full or provisional. Active membership is open to any college which has received complete accreditation or equivalent recognition of any of the types indicated under "accreditation" above. Provisional membership is open to newly organized institutions and to others which have not yet received such recognition.

Analysis of Junior College Growth

EDMUND J. GLEAZER, JR.

RECENTLY President Dwight D. Eisenhower told the National Committee for the 1960 White House Conference on Children and Youth that another year or two ought to be added to the traditional four-year high school curriculum. The President noted that modern life is complicated and that more education is essential. Although there are many reasons for suggesting that the additional work ought to be done somewhere other than in the high school, there is no denying the need to which the President referred.

Events of this past year have demonstrated that not only do the people of the United States want more and better education beyond the high school level, but the kind of society we have developed, based upon the premise of an enlightened electorate and powerful through its technology beyond anything the world has ever known, demands for its survival and fulfillment more and better education.

Our needs obviously are not limited to the technological world. It will take a well-educated person to exploit the opportunities that technology has made possible and to deal successfully with concomitant problems that cannot be ignored: Growth of population, changes in the composition of population, aspirations of people, international relationships, urbanization, and a dozen other powerful factors are interacting to provide a context for our lives which is both complicated and promising.

At the same time that the agitation among these forces increases the demand for more education beyond the high school, the number of people in the college age-range 18–21 is beginning its sharp increase. The United States Bureau of Census estimated that on July 1, 1958, there were 9,064,000 people of college age 18–21. The predicted number of people in that age bracket in 1970 is 14,573,000. To further compound the enormity of the problem is the fact that the percentage of the college-age population group attending college continues to increase.

There are certain strong countervailing forces to this growing demand for education beyond the high school; these include higher standards for admission and rising costs of attending college. One school of thought calls for the student to be charged the full amount for his college education. The opposing forces evident in the factors described remind one of the old moving picture in which two steam trains puffed along madly toward each other on the same track until they met head on in a grand and unforgettable explosion. Something like that could be developing in higher education. There is a tremendous demand for higher education stirring among the people of the United States. This is a force that will not be denied. Its full power is not yet evident but soon will be and its effect upon the traditional educational structure could be impressive.

There is a great deal of evidence to support the notion that we are now in the process of taking the next step in American education. The period from 1830 to the present has seen the development of the elementary school, the high school, the junior high school, and most recently the junior college. The President's Committee on Education Beyond the High School strongly encouraged the establishment of community colleges. Similar support has been given by the Educational Policies Commission of the National Education Association and the President's Committee on Scientists and Engineers. According to Dr. S. V. Martorana of the United States Office of Education, during the last regular legislative sessions, 38 states considered proposals bearing on the community or junior college level.

No matter how fast we move, very likely our plans will be too small and too late in concrete expression. For example, a simple projection of junior college enrollment (based on the ratio of present enrollment of freshman, sophomore, and special students to the number of people in the 18–21 age range) shows a possible 1970 enrollment of 923,000 students as a result only of the increased number of persons in the college-age group. We know, however, that due to socio-economic factors described above, it is very likely that a rapidly increasing percentage of potential college students will be enrolling in junior colleges.

Another matter to consider in estimating future junior college enrollments is the growing importance of the adult education function. It is entirely reasonable to assume that adult enrollments will match the increase in college enrollments. If this were the case we could expect by 1970 a total enrollment of freshman, sophomore, and persons enrolled in adult education courses of almost two million students.

Approximately one out of every four college students in this country now beginning work in a degree program is enrolling in a junior college. At present about half of the people who go to college in Mississippi first attend its public junior colleges. In New York, the State Department of Education estimates that at least 50 per cent of the first-year college students in 1970 will be accommodated in community colleges. Recent reports in California estimated a full-time junior college enrollment of 87,700 in 1958–59 (early tabulations in December, 1958, indicated that the estimate is about 4,000 students too low) and an estimated enrollment by 1970 of 209,200. In that year the junior college students will represent 41.3 per cent of the full-time enrollments in all institutions of higher education, both public and private, in that state.

Growth figures for this period are of unusual interest because of the dynamic character of education in general and the junior college field in particular. Identification of trends will contribute toward planning which is realistic. The tabular analysis of growth arbitrarily fixes 1900 as the starting point, although it is known that there were some two-year institutions existing before that time; the number operating at the turn of the century is an estimate. Table IV will give the reader a picture of growth in the number of institutions as well as in total enrollment from 1900 to 1957–58. The number of students is by head count of every person who attended a two-year college for one or more courses during the sessions held from June 1, 1957, until May 31, 1958. The number includes full-time, part-time matriculated students classified for credit, and special students and adults who were enrolled for short courses or for informal education.

Since 1953–54 growth in total enrollment has been at a rate of about 11 per cent each year. However, in 1957–58 the increase was only 2.56 per cent. As will be referred to more fully in connection with Tables VII and VIII a substantial decrease in adult enrollments in several states is largely responsible for the small net increase in the total. The number of institutions increased to 667 and surpassed the previous high mark of 663 in the immediate post-war year of 1946–47.

Table V is presented to show the growth of the number of institutions, those under the control of public authority, those that are independent or church-related, and the percentage of change between the two main types. Listed among the 667 junior colleges are all institutions accredited by state departments of education or regional accrediting associations as definitely organized two-year colleges, extension centers of universities, or teachers colleges. Until 1947–48 there were more junior colleges under private auspices than those publicly supported. However, from that time until 1957–58 the increase in the number of public institutions has been fairly consistent while the number of church-related and independent junior colleges has decreased. Partially responsible for the decrease is a somewhat greater likelihood of the private colleges' becoming four-year institutions. This has been particularly true of some of the smaller church-related institutions occupied almost exclusively with the preparation of teachers.

Table VI is published to show comparative growth and enrollments of public and private junior colleges. The number of students in the public institutio has exceeded enrollments in the private controlled colleges since 1921–22, and t difference increased steadily in favor the public colleges until 1951–52. Sin that time the proportion enrolled in t two types of junior colleges has held fair constant; moreover, the private instit tions showed a slight gain in 1957–58 percentage of students enrolled. A fact to be considered in interpreting the si nificance of these data is the predomina residential character of the private inst tutions as compared with the commutir student body of the majority of publ institutions. This means that the publ junior colleges have many more part-tim and adult students enrolled than do th private junior colleges. Based on com parison of freshman and sophomore en rollments only, the percentage of studen enrolled in the private institutions wa 4.4 per cent for 1957–58.

purposes of the Directory an "adult student" is defined as one who is above the compulsory school age and who would not be classified as a freshman, sophomore or special student. A "special student" is defined as one who is not classified as either a freshman or sophomore because he is carrying less than a full-time load but who can be considered to be working toward a degree, diploma, or certificate. Freshman enrollment increased by 38,975 students over the preceding year (13.3 per cent). Sophomore students numbered 21,961 more than in 1956–57 (16 per cent). However, as presented in Table VIII, the number of special and adult students declined. The states of Texas, California, and New York showed substantial decreases in adult enrollment. Among factors responsible for the decrease may be the tendency for more persons beyond the college age to become classified and work toward the associate's degree over a period of years and changing regulations in some states in regard to conditions for receiving state assistance. In California, those districts in which junior colleges are located may qualify for state assistance for out-of-district adult students if they are enrolled in graded classes, that is, in courses in the 13th and 14th years. It is apparent that methods accounting for students may very well affect the number of adult and special students reported. Also, it is likely that the number of adult students will be related sensitively to changing economic conditions. The reader will be able to observe a much greater fluctuation in adult and special student enrollments than in freshman and sophomore enrollment.

The distribution of enrollments with respect to the size of the public and private junior colleges can be observed in Table IX. Fourteen institutions that reported no students during 1957–58 were in the process of organization looking toward accepting students in the fall semester of 1958–59. These are:

As can be readily noted, the public institutions are typically much larger than privately sponsored junior colleges. Some of the small private institutions are operated by religious orders and might be described as single purpose junior colleges, e.g., preparation for teaching in church schools or other church responsibilities. As has been stated previously, the public junior colleges will have a large proportion of adult and part-time students in their enrollments. It does seem quite apparent that many junior colleges have reached the point where they can no longer be described as possessing whatever values are inherent in the small institution. About the question of optimum size there is no general agreement. A study recently completed in Los Angeles County recommends limiting enrollment in any junior college in that area to 5,500.

Combined full-time and part-time members of faculties for 1957–58 reached an all-time high with 32,656. Full-time members increased from 15,718 to 16,523, and part-time teachers increased from 14,933 to 16,133. During the year there was a proportionately greater increase in part-time teachers. To point up one of the serious problems facing junior colleges it is merely necessary to report that during the past two years the total number of junior college faculty members has increased by 5,659. It is possible that greater use of part-time teachers is one way by which administrators are meeting the problem of securing an adequate number of faculty personnel.

TYPES OF JUNIOR COLLEGES

Public or tax-supported junior colleges now number 391, while the privately controlled or church-related institutions total 276. Table X shows the distribution of control among the non-tax supported junior colleges.

The co-educational junior college is the prevailing type with a total of 544 institutions. There are 71 junior colleges for women and 52 for men. In terms of the number of years in which the colleges are organized, the two-year institution is by far the leading type with 631; 20 are organized under the four-year plan (grades 11 through 14), 12 under the three-year type, and four offer one year of education. Generally, in co-educational public junior colleges men outnumber women more than two to one.

REGIONAL ACCREDITATION OF JUNIOR COLLEGES

Table XI was first used in the 1958 Directory because of growing interest among junior colleges in regional accreditation. There is great variation among the regions and the states in the proportion of junior colleges regionally accredited. These data are for the United States only. In four of the six regions there was some increase in percentage of institutions accredited. In the other two, the Northwest and the Southern, the lower percentage is due to the increase in total number of colleges during the past year. In view of the importance of regional accreditation in the public mind, those areas in which few junior colleges are accredited may well wish to consider appropriate steps for meeting this problem. It is possible that some junior colleges were regionally accredited in the late fall of 1958 but were not so reported to the Washington office in time to be included in the Directory.

Among the private and church-related colleges the breakdown is as follows:

Baptist Colleges	30
Catholic Colleges	63
Lutheran Colleges	16
Methodist Colleges	30
Presbyterian Colleges	11
Proprietary Colleges	6
Others*	32
Total	276

* These represent about 20 denominational bodies and the YMCA.

ASSOCIATION MEMBERSHIP

Institutional membership in the American Association of Junior Colleges has increased substantially during the year. There are 496 active members as compared with 475 the preceding year, and 8 provisional members compared with 7 in 1957. In a large number of states membership is either 100 per cent or close to that figure.
